Death Cut Off Prayer.

Crucifix in hand and muttering a little prayer, "Lord have mercy on my soul," Breen walked into the death chamber at 5:49. It took just one minute to strap him in the chair and the elec-tric current of 1,780 volts and of eight amperes shot into his body at 5:50:50, cutting off his prayer.

The current was reduced to 250 volts, run up again, and shut off at 5:51:57 Perspiration dripping from his hair fell on the back of his neck, formed an arc, making a current which slightly burned the collar of his shirt. A second shock was turned on at 5:54, left on for five seconds, and the physicians pro-five seconds, and the physicians pronounced him dead. The body was quickly removed for the autopsy, and fifteen seconds after 6 o'clock Jackson was brought into the chamber.

A powerful, husky man, he was in strange contrast to the pale little feilow who had gone before. Jackson, who had within a few weeks become a convert to the Catholic faith, also carried a crucifix and was attended by the priests. It required a minute and a quarter to strap him in the chair, and as he muttered "Merciful Jesus, have mercy on me," the current was turned on at 6:01:38. On account of his powerful build Jackson was given a current of 1,800 sidists. On account of his powerful build Jackson was given a current of 1,800 volts, increasing from 8 to 10 amperes. The first contact was off at 6:02:44, and a second shock was given at 6:04:30, and was left on for four seconds. Jackson was pronounced dead at 6:05:30. As the first shock was turned on the crucifix dropped from his hand.

State Electrician Davis was in charge of the double electrocution. Both men were from New York city. Jackson's sister claimed his body, but Breen's remains have not been called for. latter left a letter asking that his body be embalmed before the autopsy, but it is thought Albert Patrick, under sentence of death for the murder of old man Rice, urged him to make the request. It was not done, the word of the prison authorities claim him at twenty-eight. Both men passed a quiet night.

peals, but a new trial denied, and he was ordered electrocuted.

Breen's crime was that of the barroom thug. On the night of September 15, 1903, he went into the saloon, corner of Catherine and Water streets, in New York city, conducted by Capt. W. H. Keyes, who had only a year before retired from the life of a pilot. Breen had been drinking. Stepping up to the bar, he pulled out a revolver, declaring that if any one of three men he named came in the place he would "put a hole in them." Later on one of the men entered, and Breen became abusive. Captain Keyes put him out of the saloon, Breen returned, and as Keyes attempted to eject him a second time he put his revolver against Keyes' breast and fired. The victim died a few minutes later.

William Abbey. He replied that Abbey was a section foreman on the railroad, Abbey hurried to the depot when he earned that a kinswoman was waiting to see him. When he entered the station the woman was very demonstrative and not a little agitated as well.

She told him her name was Mrs. Reecca Bowman, that her father and his were brothers, and that she had come o bring him good news. Abbey was incredulous and asked a great many questions regarding family history, to all of which the woman answered correctly. He recalled that his father had spoken of a brother who had been separated from the family years before and who was supposed to be dead.
